The Law Society

In the event of damage resulting from subsidence or settlement associated with coal mining, property owners can normally make a claim against the mine owner or responsible person (usually The Coal Authority). Further details are provided in the Notes & Guidance.

1.01 Past Underground Coal Mining

FURTHER ACTION

Is the property within the zone of likely physical influence on the surface of past underground coal workings?

1 seam(s) of coal have been worked at shallow depth within likely physical influence of the property, the last date of working being 1884.

Coal Authority records also indicate that 1 seam(s) of Ironstone have been worked at shallow depth within likely physical influence of the property, the last date of working being 1882.

The property is located in an area where unrecorded shallow underground Coal workings might be present.

Commentary:

In areas where shallow mining activity has taken place there is a remote risk that underground workings could collapse, causing instability problems at the surface. If any previous movement has occurred, it may already be evident. Future issues could occur spontaneously, but in particular development activity or heavy vehicle movements can provide a trigger.

As well as the risk of collapse, shallow mine workings can in rare circumstances release harmful gases. These can migrate into properties through pathways such as voids or fractures, permeable ground, or service ducts such as pipe or cable routes. Shallow mine workings can also release water.

It should be noted that the Coal Authority is the public body which addresses surface hazards arising from past coal mining activities, such as collapses, gas emissions and spontaneous combustion of coal. In the unlikely event of an issue, the Coal Authority should ensure that the site is made safe as soon as possible. If the Property has been (or were to be) damaged by subsidence caused by coal mining, the property owner will normally have a right to claim from the Coal Authority under the Coal Mining Subsidence Act 1991 (CMSA). A claim can be made using the Coal Authority contact details at the back of this report.

However, please note that as well as shallow workings of coal, shallow workings of non-coal minerals have also been identified within the Coal Authority records. As such, if any subsidence were to be caused by these non-coal workings, there is a possibility that the Coal Authority would refuse to provide further assistance under the CMSA for repair, reconstruction or loss of value to the Property. Although not a substitute for a comprehensive building's insurance policy, this FCI CON29m provides a unique integrated insurance policy to protect the Property purchaser/owner/lender in the event that a claim for subsidence damage caused by the identified shallow non-coal workings is rejected by the Coal Authority as a result of the working(s) not being covered by the Coal Mining Subsidence Act 1991. Please see the appendix for the policy certificate and terms.

Next Steps:

The purchaser themselves could look for obvious signs of subsidence, or subsidence-related damage to the Property. This could include slumps or depressions in the ground, cracked plaster or brickwork, and sticking doors or windows.

However, identifying property defects and accurately determining the cause is a specialist task. As such, we advise that the purchaser commission a RICS Homebuyer Survey, or a RICS Building Survey, and provide a copy of this report to the surveyor. The building characteristics (such as age, construction type etc.), as well as the purchasers ambitions for the Property (e.g. to alter/extend) will determine which survey-type is appropriate. The RICS website offers further information, as well as a useful tool for identifying a local chartered surveyor: <https://www.ricsfirms.com/>

If the purchaser has already instructed a building survey for their benefit, they may wish to discuss the outcome of this report with their surveyor.

If a lender is involved in the transaction, the conveyancer/solicitor should refer to guidance issued by UK Finance or the Building Societies Association to establish if the lender requires notification of past underground mine workings.

If any development which would disturb the ground (including extensions or conservatories) is planned, the homeowner should seek appropriate advice from a building surveyor or structural engineer.

Finally, as outlined in the 'Commentary' section, if the Property has been (or were to be) damaged by subsidence caused by the identified non-coal mineral workings, the Property owner may be unsuccessful in making a claim against the Coal Authority under the Coal Mining Subsidence Act 1991. FCI's unique Non-Coal Minerals Insurance policy included within this report has been designed to offer the Property purchaser/owner/lender some degree of protection in such an event.

1.13 Development Considerations

NOTE

The property is located within a Development High Risk Area which may include coal mining related features at shallow depth which can impact on new development.

If any development is intended at the property that would disturb the ground (an extension for example) it would be prudent to seek appropriate technical advice from the surveyor or structural engineer.

Since the property is in an area where there are faults or other lines of weakness, the soil and surface geological conditions should be investigated and factored into recommendations for the foundation design.

Within such an area the planning authority will require a Coal Mining Risk Assessment in support of any planning application for development unless an exemption applies. Further information on Coal Mining Risk Assessments and the exemptions is available at <https://www.gov.uk/guidance/planning-applications-coal-mining-risk-assessments>.

Ownership of coal and mines of coal is normally vested in the Coal Authority and the interference with or removal of any coal found during development would require their permission. If any such features are encountered during development the Coal Authority should be notified immediately by telephoning 0345 762 6848.

2.01 Report Notes

METHODOLOGY

This report is a desk study risk assessment, and no site or ground inspection or physical investigation has been carried out. The impacts of the risks addressed in this report are normally measured in terms of quiet enjoyment, saleability, mortgageability, and the value of the property; the risk assessment in this report is provided by FCI who are regulated by RICS.

2.02 CON29M

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION

This official CON29M report is a property specific interpretation of coal mining activity considering past, current and future underground and surface coal mining in terms of the recorded presence and likely impact of any such workings.

The coal mining search enquiries within this report comprise an official CON29M (2018) report produced by Future Climate Info Limited under Licence from the Law Society. This report is prepared in accordance with the Law Society's Guidance Notes 2018, User Guide 2018, and Terms and Conditions 2018 (available at: <https://www.lawsociety.org.uk/topics/property/con29-forms>) and Future Climate Info Limited's own Terms and Conditions.

This report includes Coal Search Insurance with an indemnity limit of £100,000, the certificate for which is appended and is also backed by Future Climate Info Limited's £10 million Professional Indemnity Insurance.

In the event of damage resulting from subsidence or settlement associated with coal mining, property owners can normally make a claim against the mine owner or responsible person (usually The Coal Authority) under the provisions of the Coal Mining Subsidence Act 1991 (the 1991 Act). In such an event the mine owner or responsible person will take remedial action and arrange for repairs to the property to be carried out to the reasonable satisfaction of the owner. The Coal Authority operate a 24 hour, 7 day a week call out service on 01623 646 333 for reporting surface hazards caused by coal mining.

A guide setting out the property owners' rights and the obligations of the Coal Authority (or other responsible persons under the 1991 Act) can be obtained by telephoning 0345 762 6848 or visiting: <https://www.gov.uk/government/publications/coal-mining-subsidence-damage-notice-form/coal-mining-subsidence-damage-a-guide-to-your-rights>.

It should be noted that the 1991 Act does not cover subsidence damage caused by the extraction of coal where the working and getting of the coal was ancillary to the working of other minerals; or where the coal was worked or gotten by virtue of the grant of a gale in the Forest of Dean or any other part of the Hundred of St. Briavels, which is in the county of Gloucestershire. Although records relating to other minerals are in the Coal Authority data and may be presented in this report, the protection of the 1991 Act may not apply in respect of workings in other minerals unless deemed ancillary to the working of coal or registered with the Coal Commission under the Coal Act 1938.
